When a visitor from Skinner's past comes to the ranch, Chase has to make a critical decision.

Can he stay at Spring Hills Ranch forever with Skinner, or is it finally time to return to the city?

Excerpt:

With a final sip, Skinner finished his whiskey and set the empty tumbler back on the bar. Loosening the buttons on his cuffs, he walked over to Chase and lovingly ran his hand through his hair.

"Are you ready Boy?"

Chase's eyes dropped to the floor. His muscles clenched and his half-aroused length sprang to full attention. Chase knew that as soon as Skinner called him "Boy" that he wanted them to enter their respective roles.

"Yes, sir. I'm ready."

"Come along then," said the older male as he lead the way to their basement room. The door to their playroom was well hidden and locked. Only Skinner had a key to the room.

Unlocking the door, Skinner stepped inside and flicked on the lights. Silently, Chase followed him into the room and bit back a shiver as Skinner pushed the door shut and turned the lock. Various instruments and toys hung on the walls. Whips, crops, gags, ropes, and chains. Everything in the room was arranged around a single altar located at the center of the room and the four metal rings set into the floor around the altar.

"Do you remember your safe word?"

"Yes, sir, it's doorknob," replied Chase.

"Good," agreed Jake as a hard detached expression replaced the tender smile that was on his face.
